

I strongly object to adopting a national Telephone Privacy law with low standards that preempt state Telephone Privacy laws. By allowing States to establish their own Telephone Privacy laws, the people of each State can decide how much telephone solicitation intrusion they are willing to tolerate. The only way I would support a low national standard, would be if it was established as a "minimum" which each State would be allowed to strengthen as its population desired. Thank you.